

HETTY GREEN'S FEAR OF DEATH.

America's Richest Woman Tells Why She Lived in Obscure Lodgings.

DAILY DREAD OF ASSASSINS.

She insists that Her Father and an Aunt Were Foully Murdered.

EXECUTOR BARLING'S VERSION.

He Says Mrs. Green's Mind Is Affected and Then Becomes Silent.

'At last the cause of Hetty Green's wanderings and eccentricities has come to light. In the story she tells is fully explained why she cooked her own food, why she lived in obscure apartments and changed her home often and why she feared notoriety. She was afraid.

This woman, possessing $40,000,000 and more, was in daily fear of death, in dread of assassination, and she has walked the streets with terror in her heart, not knowing at what moment the blow might fall.

She believes her father was killed; she believes her aunt's death was hastened by drugs, and she says that she, too, has been marked out as a victim that her money may fall into hands that have seen outstretched for years to receive it.

This woman has made a great many queer remarks to her lawyers. One is at least worthy of consideration and investigation:

After Her Father's Slaver.

"Some day," she has said a dozen times, "some day I'll find out the man who was with my father just before he died, and who inflicted such wounds on him that the sheets were saturated with his blood."

Before going into the details of this story it might be well to say that William H. Stanton, lawyer, counsel for Mrs. Green, says there is nothing romantic or visionary about her. She is a wonderfully practical and sensible woman, and he believes that what she says she at least believes is true, and not the creation of an excited or overwrought mind.

As against this one of two executors of her father's estate, Henry A. Barling, said this morning with emphasis: "Mrs. Green is crazy. She is either crazy or a liar."

He was advised by Alexander Richmond, a cousin of Mrs. Green, to say nothing, but he continued:

"Why, her father had not been dead twelve hours before she sent for an inventory of his estate. She's crazy. Listen, here is her letter:

"June 15, 1885.

"Gentlemen: I have to request that you will answer any questions that Mr. H. Green may ask you on all matters about my father's business affairs. I wish you gentlemen to consult with Mr. Green on all matters of importance where advice is required."

"HETTY H. ROBINSON."

"I tell you the woman is crazy," he went on. On this letter my old book-keeper, who is now dead, wrote the following indorsement:

"This was written when Mr. Robinson was yet warm."

Don't say anything more," put in Mr. Richmond, and then it was requested that all further inquiry be made of Evans, Hoate & Beaman.

Hetty Green was reared by her maiden aunt, Sylvia Ann Howland, at New Bedford, Mass., and her father was a wealthy resident of the same town, who had extensive business interests in New York as well.

That Day Her Terror Was Born.

It was while Mr. Robinson was in this city that he became so ill that he thought it necessary to send for his daughter. When the young woman arrived she found her father in a serious condition, and the story he told her then has lived with her ever since. It has haunted her all her life; and that day her terror was born.

He told her that he was in the power of a band of conspirators. In detached sentences the man, whose life was almost gone, told her the details of the plot, and he told her that she must watch her step, too, should be forced to follow him. He gave her what advice he could but his mind was almost gone and he was incapable of either great mental or physical effort.

Then it was just before he died that she found him, upon returning to the room after a short absence, bathed in his own blood and suffering from wounds inflicted by a prominent person who had called upon him.

He advised her to marry her present husband, because, he said, he could be trusted, and then, after telling her that all his property should go to her, he said he intended to have such men as Henry Grinnell, of New Bedford, Mr. Green and a member of the law firm of Day & Lord, as the executors and trustees. He felt uneasy about his wife when it was in the hands of Day & Lord. He wanted to look at it before he died, in order to make quite sure things were as he had intended, so he sent for it.

When the will was brought into the house he was dead and it was given into the possession of one of the servants of the house. Not until it was proved was it known that it had been changed from what the dying man had wished, and it was discovered that the executors and trustees, instead of being men of responsibility, were two of Robinson's clerks and one of his servants, who were to receive $100,000 each, and that but $1,000,000 out of the great fortune was to go to the daughter outright.

Her Aunt's Mysterious Death.

Then the conspiracy, to use Mrs. Green's own language, for this is her story, broadened out. Miss Sylvia Ann Howland, living up in New Bedford, became suddenly and mysteriously ill. Her death was as sudden as her illness, and she died without having spoken to one of her friends or relatives.

Charles Franklin, President of the Thirteenth Ward Republican Committee of Williamsburg, is making a collection to defray the funeral expenses of four-year-old Dina Cornwell, who was burned to death yesterday.

When Cornwell, who is employed in Vogel's tin shop, South Ninth street and Kent avenue, left his home, 209 South First street, yesterday afternoon, for work, he had a badly furnished flat, a wife and three bright children—Maud, seven years old, Dina and baby Ella. One of his children is dead, the two others are disfigured. His wife is temporarily insane and his pretty home has been destroyed by fire.

Last night a family stopped with a kind-hearted neighbor, who volunteered to keep them until after Christmas.

The family lived on the top flat in a four-story structure. Shortly after Cornwell went to work his wife started for the grocery store across the street, leaving the three children alone.

According to Maud, the children took advantage of their mother's absence to play with the fire in the dining-room stove. She took out coal with a shovel, scattered them about the room, and soon were ablaze.

Mrs. James Hanson, who lives across the hall, heard the cries of the children, and carried Ella and Maud, all alone, into the street. Mrs. Cornwell returned from the grocery in time to take her children to the arms of a neighbor.

Little Dina was forgotten during the excitement, and not until after the fire-time did she escape. She was found in the apartments was a search made for her. The child's body was found beneath the bed in which she slept at night.

It was said to-day that Mrs. Cornwell's condition was critical, and she may not recover.

PRISONERS PANIC STRICKEN.

Incipient Fire in a Police Station Causes Wild Alarm.

A dozen excited and badly frightened female prisoners, fearful of being burned to death, created a lively racket in the women's department of the Eldridge street police station at 2:30 o'clock this morning.

Matron Manges and a few prisoners, who were awake at that early hour, discovered thin sheets of smoke coming into one of the cells from a crevice in the ceiling near the skylight. In a short time the smoke had filled the cell. The inmates shouted loudly for assistance and made frantic efforts to break through the door. The matron, who had a squad of men on hand in a few minutes, the female prisoners were marched out under escort into another part of the building.

The fire, which originated in the roof of the station-house, was soon extinguished. The damage was trifling.

Professor's Widow Threatened to Death.

HERKLEY CALLED. Mrs. 24-Mrs. Eleanor Le Conte, widow of the late Prof. John Le Conte, and sister-in-law of Prof. Joseph Le Conte, both distinguished members of the family of the same name, was threatened with death at her own residence, 340 West 42nd street, last night, when a fire broke out in the building.

And now Hetty Green is afraid the conspiracies are leading to tragedy, a boarding-house in Brooklyn, she found a fire in the kitchen. A house in Hempstead, L. I., where she was visiting, was broken into by men who she said were in the woods of buildings have fallen dangerously near to her.

And now, to bring the whole thing to light, she has a suit against the executors and trustees of her father's estate, demanding an accounting of their trust. Off the official trustees but one is left, Henry A. Barling.

Her consulting lawyer is William H. Stanton, of 24 Cedar street, but he is not her lawyer of record. When the case finally comes to the courts her lawyer of record, the man who will throw down the gauntlet to the firm of Evans, Hoate & Beaman, will be ex-Surrogate Rodolph.

For three years the case has been before a referee in the Middle Building, and once a week Mrs. Green has been present.

Mrs. Green was last seen this morning, but to all visitors who desired to see her she returned the answer that she was too ill to even say a word.

CANNOT MEET THIS YEAR.

No Notice Yet Sent Out to the Tammany District Leaders.

None of the Tammany district leaders appears to be willing to father the report that a meeting of the Executive Committee will be held soon whether the Chairman notices must be given by the Executive Committee. He admitted that he cannot now be held before December, but he declared he had no idea whether this would be done or not.

No meeting of the Committee has been held since election. This is probably without a precedent in the history of the organization. As a rule the primaries are held the last week in December, but this year they were postponed to January.

Strictly speaking, the organization will not meet until after the election, but the Executive Committee will meet, said Mayor Gilroy today. "You know I am not a member of the Committee, and I am not informed as to its intentions."

Alderman Nicholas T. Brown, who succeeded Police Justice Oliver as the leader of the Second District, professed to know nothing of the matter, but he had heard some talk about postponing the primaries until next Summer, and he declared he had no idea whether this would be done or not.

A number of the Tammany leaders called on Mayor Gilroy today, but none of them could be induced to say much about the long delay in calling the Executive Committee together.

One of the callers was President James J. Martin of the Police Board. He refused to be interviewed.

Police Justice William H. Burke, the leader in the Twenty-sixth District, was another who was called on, and he said that it would do no good to hold primaries now, because the reapportionment of the city would make any organization perfected now useless.

Another caller, Patrick Keenan, of the Sixth District, admitted that he never before knew of any such delay in calling a meeting, but he thought it was all right.

PRINTING FOR 1895.

Contracts Awarded for the City Departments To-Day.

The Board of City Record today awarded contracts for printing and lithographing for the various city departments for 1895, as follows: The firm of Martin B. Hogan, $15.00 for printing; Jordan Stationery Company, $37.50 for lithographing; total, $52.50.

The total is about $1,000 less than for 1894, although it is said that for 1895 about $2,000 more of material will be supplied.

Another Richmond in the Field.

John R. Van Wormer, of the Nineteenth Assembly District, is the latest candidate mentioned for the Presidency of the Republican County Committee. The contest is a free-for-all, and the friends of the various candidates are busy as bees.

Sandy Thomas, a colored porter at the Victoria Hotel, was discharged from the Victoria Hotel today, because Justice Hogan did not think he intended to defend the Hudson River Bridge. Sandy was discharged because he was a colored man and he was a porter at the Victoria Hotel.
